Inocencio Martinez v. Yeshiva Kehilath Yakov, Inc., et al. (Bronx County, Index No. 21590) - Served as special trial counsel and obtained defense verdict in damages only trial involving Labor Law 240. Plaintiff was granted summary judgment several years before trial on Labor Law 240 liability and the sole question before the jury was the amount of damages. Despite multiple surgeries, including a spinal fusion surgery, the jury awarded no damages.

Philip Walsh v. 333 Bronx River Tenants Corp., et al., 69318/2017 (Sup. Ct. Westchester Cty. 2020) - Successfully obtained grant of summary judgment, dismissing case involving double amputation and severe 3rd degree burns where the firm's client, a CO-OP building owner, was alleged to have negligently maintained a boiler system within the building.

Fox, et al. v. Mark, et al., 181 A.D.3d 560 (2d Dept. 2020) – Successfully defended, on Appeal, a Decision and Order granting summary judgment and dismissing claims asserted against our client, a home health aide, involving the alleged loss of the right of sepulcher and negligent infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiff's claim was that our client failed to timely notify him of the death of his mother, which occurred after the home health aide had left for the evening. The following morning, the home health aide could not gain access to the apartment in which the decedent resided. The decedent was later discovered by plaintiff when he went to investigate why his mother had not returned his phone calls earlier that day. We successfully established that no duty of care ran to the family members of the decedent to notify them of the death of the decedent, since our client did not have access to, or actual possession of the decedent's body. The case presented a very narrow issue on liability extending to health care providers and the proper handling of a body after death. These issues are particularly timely in the wake of the COVID 19 Pandemic.
